

The Frogs Who Desired a King

Once upon a time, there was a large lake in the forest, in which numerous frogs lived. The frogs were tired from ruling themselves. They had so much freedom that spoiled them, and they not did anything instead of sitting and croaking here and there in a boring manner.

They desired a king that could amuse them with great pomp and show, and could display them the royalty. In addition, they had already declared that they do not want any water and milk as their king. Therefore, they together sent a pray to the God.

God saw how silly and foolish creatures they are, however, for making them quite, calm and making them to realise that they have a king, he threw down a large log, which fell in the water with a large splash.

The frogs quickly hid themselves among the grass and reeds and thought that the new king would be any frightening giant. However, after sometime they realised, how much modest and peaceful the king log was.

Not long afterwards, the older frogs made the log a meeting place, where they loudly complained to the God about the king and asked for a new one. However, young frogs made it as their diving place.

The Second King — Crane

The God now sent a crane to be the Frogland King for teaching them a lesson. On arrival only, the crane proved to be a very varied kind of a king from the older king log. The crane saw it as a good opportunity to eat up all of the frogs, as they believed the crane as their king, and swallowed all the frogs.

Very soon, a few of them who left begged to the god in heart-breaking crooks to take away this ruthless dictator, before he destroys everyone.

The God replied, "How now, are you still unsatisfied? You got whatever you asked for, and therefore, you should only blame yourself for your misfortune!"

Moral

This interesting story has two very meaningful morals, which are:

1. First, ensure that you can enhance your situation by the changes, before implementing them.
2. Be careful for whatever you wish.

Every Time is Story Time

By story, we can grow our creativity of mind because every story has a moral, and if we learn more we can learn new and good things. That is why you tell these all Stories to your children and tell them their Morals because, by morals, children can learn new and unique things. You can learn morals by reading it loudly. So, why are you waiting for? Tell The Story of The Frog Who Desired a King to your child and tell him the Moral of this Story.